

Computers and Internet Use

The Auburn Public Library extends free use of public access computers to all users of the Library.

The Auburn Public Library will not limit the access of any Library resources, materials, or services due to a patron's age, origin, background, or views. This includes free access to, and unrestricted use of, all the technology resources that the Library offers. The Auburn Public Library does not monitor and has no control over the information accessed via Library computers and via the Internet, and the Library assumes no responsibility for its content or for any damages, direct or indirect, arising from its use.

As with other Library materials, parents and guardians of minor children must assume responsibility for their children's use of Library computers and the Internet. Librarians and advisory or governing bodies cannot assume the role of parents or the functions of parental authority in the private relationship between parent and child. The Auburn Public Library will not assume, abrogate, or overrule the rights and responsibilities of parents and guardians. We maintain that only parents and guardians have the right and the responsibility to determine their children's—and only their children's—access to Library resources. Parents and guardians who do not want their children to have access to specific Library services, materials, or facilities should so advise their children.

The Auburn Public Library, in accordance with Alabama state law, strictly prohibits viewing material that would be classified as obscene and/or pornographic. Material will be deemed pornographic if the average person, applying today's community standards, would find the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient or sexual interest, as defined in the Code of Alabama. Any material not considered obscene/pornographic by these standards is allowed to be viewed by all patrons at the discretion of the viewer and their legal guardian, if applicable.
