WELCOME ALISON HALL

The City of Auburn will welcome Alison Hall as its new Parks and Recreation director. A seasoned parks and recreation professional, Hall comes to Auburn from the City of Dothan where she has served as Leisure Services director since 2020. Hall has had a variety of roles throughout her 25 years in the parks and recreation field. Hall worked for the City of Auburn's Finance Department during graduate school and became the City's first cultural arts director in 1999. She managed and directed programs and events at the then-newly constructed Jan Dempsey Community Arts Center, and she co-founded Auburn CityFest, the City's largest outdoor arts and crafts festival that will celebrate its 23rd year in April. She held various positions in the department over a 21-year span, overseeing Auburn Parks and Recreation's community programs and special events, including programming for seniors and residents with special needs. In 2011, she began overseeing the City's recreation and aquatics facilities. Along with her service through Auburn Parks and Recreation, Hall invested in the Auburn community off the job.
